Ten Thousand Boys Growing Corn

Strawberry Season Two and One-Half Months Long—A Great State's Resources Attractively Shown.

Ten thousand ambitious Illinois' farmer boys are industriously tending 10,000 tracts of ground and are raising crops of corn, the choice of which will make up a wonderful World's Fair exhibit at the World's Fair.

Prizes aggregating $5,000 have been offered to the boys who produce the best corn, and every farmer boy in Illinois was privileged to enter the contest. The capital required was 5 cents in cash, about one-eighth of an acre of ground, and energy. The State Board of Agriculture furnished each boy, for the consideration of 5 cents, with 500 grains of white corn of the best grade. This corn was to be planted on a tract of ground that was to be tended by the boy alone. The choicest crops are to be selected from each boy's crop and the 10,000 samples to constitute Illinois exhibit of boy-grown corn at the World's Fair.

Another corn exhibit of great interest will be that of the Illinois Corn Breeders' Association. In the northern part of Illinois there are eight fields of corn. These eight fields represent the eight pure and distinct varieties. Scientific agriculturists claim that in order to keep the corn pure the varieties must be segregated, and that if any two of the pure varieties are planted in adjoining fields the wind will carry the pollen from one field to another, and in the course of a short time the two varieties will lose their characteristics and become identical.

With its 400 miles of length Illinois is enabled to make an unrivaled fruit display. When the World's Fair opens April 1, 1904, the strawberry growers from the extreme southern part of the state, in "Egypt," as southern Illinois is termed, will show as fine strawberries as can be grown in any section in the world. The berry belt extends north for 400 miles, and on the first of July Illinois will still be showing fine berries harvested in the northern tier of counties. Thus every day for a season of more than two months, Illinois will display fresh strawberries grown within her borders. Cold storage may add another two weeks to this remarkable record.

Following strawberries will come raspberries, blackberries, cherries, plums, peaches, pears and apples. In the latter fruit Illinois claims great distinction. Clay county is one of the most famous apple counties in the world, and the yield there, year after year, is enormous. In every county of the state apples are considered a reliable crop, but Clay county is in a class by herself. Every day during the season Illinois will have fresh fruit put on the tables of the Palace of Horticulture.

Important as are her agricultural and horticultural resources, they are surpassed by her dairying and live stock industries. Illinois will take a prominent part in the model dairy to be installed in the Agricultural Building. F. D. Coburn, Chief of the Live Stock Department, for the exposition, is reported as having said that if the live stock department contained no exhibits other than those of Illinois the displays would compare favorably with those made by the world at any previous international exposition.

Illinois has a World's Fair fund of $250,000 at her disposal. Her state building will be one of the handiwork on the plateau of states and will cost about $75,000. It stands on high ground, under a broad veranda, surrounded by the building on all sides, will form the lower tier of a pyramid. Gigantic statues of Lincoln and Grant will flank the main entrance, and on each side of the drum of the dome will stand great sculpture groups symbolical of agriculture and other industries.

What is true of Illinois may be said of many of the other states to be represented at the World's Fair. The plans of the Kentucky Exposition Association only contemplate an expenditure of $100,000, but with that sum it can make a display that will equal many of Illinois' exhibits and excel others of hers. Citizens of the state should not hesitate further to make their contributions to the fund.
